Overview

A framework for building genuine executive-level relationships and the personal gravitas that lets a consultant operate as a peer in C-suite conversations, rather than being treated as a capable but junior-feeling outside resource.

Is "gravitas" something you're born with or can it genuinely be built? It's substantially buildable — this playbook treats gravitas as the observable result of specific, practicable habits (preparation depth, point-of-view clarity, composure under challenge), not an innate trait.

How is this different from general executive presence training?

This playbook is specifically calibrated to the consultant-client relationship, where gravitas has to be earned quickly with someone who didn't choose you as a long-term colleague and is actively assessing whether you're worth the fee.
